

To whom it may concern,

Ho'omana is more than a place to visit, because it stays with you. As a receptionist, I've greeted guests who were overwhelmed by the beauty and serenity of the property. I've walked guests through the native botanical gardens, around the hula platform and the ahu, who expressed they could feel the immense love in this place.

As for myself, I've been blessed to have spent a great bit of time at Ho'omana as an employee, as a student of lomi lomi, and as a guest. Now, from more than 3,000 miles away, the aloha spirit infuses my world every day, and I attribute such a gift wholeheartedly to Ho'omana.

It would be a shame to deny visitors the opportunity to experience Maui in the way that Ho'omana offers: through an ancient Hawaiian perspective, from upcountry, through malama 'aina. Jeana Iwalani Naluai and Justin Tafuri are stewards of the land who care deeply about their impact on the island and around the globe. I fully support Ho'omana and furthermore believe it to be an example of how tourism on Maui should be.

With sincere regard,
