MINATOYA PROPERTY ANALYSIS

HOW DID WE GET HERE?

For decades, a quiet transformation has been unfolding across Maui's apartment-zoned properties. Originally envisioned as a mix of owner-occupied units, long-term rentals, and limited or occasional visitor use, these developments have largely been converted into short-term vacation rentals (STRs). This shift has hollowed out our residential communities, removed housing from the local pool, and pushed working families further to the margins.

The rise of online platforms such as VRBO (launched in 1995) and Airbnb (founded in 2008) dramatically expanded the reach and profitability of STRs, allowing individual unit owners to function as commercial operators. What once may have been a seasonal rental or a unit occasionally loaned to family became part of a global tourism inventory—marketed, booked, and reviewed like a hotel room. Over time, many absentee owners stopped renting long-term to local families altogether, opting instead to charge daily rates. This technological and cultural shift coincided with a wave of investor-driven buying, particularly after the passing of original owners, many of whom were retirees.

As a result, units originally accessible as starter homes for young families or retirement housing for Maui residents were transformed into unstaffed, digitally managed vacation businesses—often without any meaningful presence of on-site management, guest services, or accountability. This disruption has made it nearly impossible for the next generation of kama'āina to find housing, not only by removing long-term rental options for Maui's working class, but also by artificially inflating the value of these units beyond the reach of local buyers.

In addition, many of these units—originally intended to serve as residential housing—are now poorly managed commercial vacation rental businesses, lacking guest services and contributing little to Maui's economic ecosystem. Reviews from travelers themselves describe issues like lack of accountability, inconsistent standards, and neglected furnishings, underscoring the fact that these are not well-functioning visitor accommodations but instead hollowed-out residential properties.

SITE VISITS & OBSERVED OPERATIONS

Between June 2024 and June 2025, Lahaina Strong and volunteers conducted site visits to more than 100 Minatoya properties across South and West Maui. These visits took place Monday through Friday during regular business hours. We collected observations regarding management practices, visible staffing, signage, and any indicators of whether properties were operating like hotels.

What we found was striking: the vast majority of properties—over 90%—lacked hotel-like services, on-site staff, or meaningful guest support. While a small handful featured lobbies, front desks, or uniformed staff, most were quiet, unstaffed, and operated as digital, self-service rentals. Two-thirds of the properties visited had no workers observed and either closed or non-existent offices. This challenges the common narrative that these operations meaningfully contribute to the local economy or provide substantial employment opportunities.

Our findings make one thing clear: these properties are overwhelmingly residential in character and use. While individual exceptions exist, our boots-on-the-ground data supports a broad phaseout of all STR use in the apartment zones. There is no reason to structure county policy around a small minority of properties that might qualify for hotel classification and have been offered a path to do so.

Most Minatoya apartment complexes have different managers for each unit instead of on-site management and centralized booking.

Most Minatoya properties have closed offices during regular business hours and require self-registration of guests and their vehicles.

Most Minatoya properties have vintage mailbox walls—an architectural detail that reflects their original design as residential buildings.

Properties like Maui Sands, offer simple storage solutions that can be replicated, and indicate an intent for long term residency.

MINATOYA PROPERTY ANALYSIS

*Note on aforementioned Single-Family Homes and single owner properties: While the vast majority of Minatoya properties are multi-unit condominium complexes, a small number of single-family homes—particularly those on Halama Street, 'Ili'ili Road, and Uluniu Road in South Maui—are also included on the list. These properties are fundamentally different in character, each with a single owner, and are not the primary focus of Bill 9. Should the owners of these homes wish to continue short-term rental operations, they can pursue Conditional Use Permits or apply under the existing regional STR or B&B permitting frameworks. Their size, structure, and ownership model make them clear outliers that can be reasonably and efficiently addressed by the Planning Commission on a case-by-case basis.

HOTEL-LIKE OPERATIONS ARE THE EXCEPTION—NOT THE RULE

Out of all the Maui Minatoya properties visited between June 2024 and June 2025, only a handful demonstrated the obvious appearance of staffing, guest services, and management typical of hotel operations. Most lacked even a basic office presence, with little to no signs of full-time staff, guest services or cohesive management.

The vast majority of these properties function as disjointed, self-serve, rental buildings. They operate largely through off-site property managers, digital check-in platforms, or contracted service providers, contributing little to the local employment base or guest experience.

Other observations included broken irrigation systems and water features left running, as well as water being wasted during the hottest parts of the day, washing tennis courts, pool decks, or walkways, despite our ongoing water shortages. These actions reflect not just a lack of oversight but a disconnect from community priorities and resource stewardship.

With perhaps a dozen properties potentially qualifying for hotel or resort zoning, and another dozen single owner properties, it is entirely reasonable for the Planning Commission to evaluate any legitimate rezoning requests on a case-by-case basis during the multi-year phaseout.

Honor the original residential purpose of these neighborhoods:
No new hotel zoning without strict guardrails ensuring it applies only to genuine hotel operators.
