EXTERNAL FACTORS

The near term outlook for Maui's economy looks promising based on the strength of an unexpected surge in the tourism sector. The real estate market is within sight of pre-recession levels and rising property values have helped the County of Maui increase real property tax revenues to near all-time highs. There has been a gradual improvement in the overall construction industry amid signs that residential construction activity is poised to accelerate. Interest rates continue to remain low, enhancing the county's ability to finance capital improvement projects.
