.Hi Michele, I have 3 Videos Taken at Kaanapali Beach Hotel. The first one was on Christmas Day Which shows a few Valet parked cars in the Public Beach Parking stalls. The Valet man was there parking cars and I asked him about the Beach Parking and he stated he had no control of the cars parked there and I was trespassing. The second Video I was going to park at the Public Beach Parking Lot then read the Signs . On the chain that went half way across the entrance was the sign that said to go to the front deck. Before I did looked in the lot and saw 3 Valet Parked cars and about 8 stalls open in the Beach Parking and the Beach Access gate was locked. The service entrance to the hotel looked secure and locked. As I was walking to the front desk i looked for any place to park in the round about in front of the hotel and it was packed with Valet parked cars with no safe place to park one more as i was walking to the entrance to the lobby I put my cell phone in pocket and the video must have turned off when I heard a sound I checked it and had to start a new video which goes to the third video talking to the person at the front desk. He said there was no beach parking at night and at the end he did direct me to park at the round about which was full but he said there was a spot but there was not the only place where i could have parked was on the sharp corner on exit with both the front and back of my car hanging out. Also the beach access gate was locked and it was not safe at all to walk out the entrance where the cars would come in around a dark blind corner with a hedge and no sidewalk. I chose not to bother with it for those reasons. The hotel could not even accommodate one car let alone any more for beach parking last night but they still had 7 open more Public beach parking stalls open for hotel use only! and would not let me park there. Not that i would with the beach access gate locked. These public beach parking lots need to be reserved for the 24 hours a day so people can go fishing or walk on the public beach. As it is these hotels have been violating the the Public Beach Parking laws and the intent of public access to them for the last 45 years.
